Victor and the other main heads of the three lemon families (Gremlin, Pacer, Trunkov) attend a meeting with Professor Z in Porto Corsa to discuss their evil plans about discrediting the Allinol by using the radiation disguised camera to crash out the racers in the World Grand Prix that use the gas, and ensure that all cars keep using conventional fuel to secure the largest unexplored oil resources in the world. p. 37. Pixar Times. Coincidentally, or as a pun by the authors, the name "Guido" is a perfect homonym for the Italian inflected verb meaning "I drive".[citation needed] In Cars 2, Guido serves the same purpose he served in the first film's climax in Lightning's pit crew throughout the film. El Guapo and Papo (voiced by Rafael Sigler) are Mexican race cars who visit Radiator Springs to race against Lightning McQueen in road races around Radiator Springs in Cars: The Video Game. Unlike Lightning's agent (Harv, who doesn't watch the race), Tex is an avid race fan who would never miss a race. McQueen exits the race to allow Cruz to race. He wore the sponsor for two decades. He also has some elements of the 2014 Nissan GT-R Concept 2020 Vision Gran Turismo and has working laser headlights and taillights (he keeps them off in Piston Cup races). After watching McQueen's poor performance on the simulator, Sterling attempted to convince McQueen's poor performance on the simulator. has no dining car and no spare compartment because he's filled with the finest in high-tech, classified spy gear and probably has a few secret agents aboard.
